Gender is a lie!

According to a Eurocentric view it has been there since the dawn of people.

This is bullshit.

Gender is simply a myth that has been told for so long,
and reinforced in a number of way
But there is no need for a Eurocentric analysis of civilization or "His-story" to find that or to prove it.
I and plenty others ARE the proof.

I believed the lie that I was "male"
until I truly analyzed the definition of it and found that I was lost.
Then I considered myself "male adjacent"
until I fully understood the endless pain and suffering caused by gender.
Then I called myself "agender", breaking with gender but not yet enough to not label myself.
Until now when I have accepted the complete and unilateral rejection of the social construct we call "gender".
When I realized that ANY understanding of gender
would not fit me into it.
When I realized that the only way for me to be happy in my body was for my body to not be gendered at all.
That the only way for my liberation was,
in part,
the total evisceration of gender.

"We are not looking to create a better system,

for we are not intereseted in positive politics at all.

All we demand in the present is a relentless attack on gender and the modes of social meaning and intelligibility it creates"

- Alyson Escalante "Gender Nihilism: An Anti-Manifesto"

It was not some grand analysis of origin or existence.

It was from what I found true in my heart
and the suffering inflicted by it that surrounds me,
and from what I have seen,
others have found the same thing.

I would argue that more and more people are waking up to the realization that gender is nothing more than an oppressive construct.

But the move is not guaranteed.
It must be pushed and defended every step of the way.

We have seen for hundreds of years the attempts to stop the erosion and destruction of gender.

You may think to yourself "but I'm x y or z gender and I love it."

I'm not rejecting you as a person.

But if you are trans like myself people will create excuses to exclude you and we can disprove all of them until the heat death of the universe.

But in the absence of gender no one has to "approve" of your identity as your identity is simply your lived truth.

For non-trans people,
the same applied,
but dare to push outside of your confines.

Try on and wear "feminine" or "masculine" clothing,
try out and participate in "masculine" or "feminine" hobbies.

One by one destroy every preconceived notion of "gendered" things that you currently hold.

So the only way to combat gender is the complete and unilateral rejection of it.

If people ask your gender,
tell them none.

The only time to define yourself with gender is when absolutely necessary in the current system.

The true abolition of gender cannot occur until plenty of other systems have been abolished.

But that doesn't mean you can't start now.

If you are a parent,
encourage your children to explore every aspect of life
and not allow other to apply definition and terms to them.

I certainly don't have all the answers
but in some ways the chaos of trying to destroy it can assist towards its destruction.

"Gender is of course something outside of ourselves which imprisons us, but this realization has been the continuous source of the revolt which tends toward its decomposition.

The faggot heretics,

witches,

and *gay rioters

show us that domesticated gender has always been experienced as an *external constraint.

This is exactly why it must be constantly re-naturalized and re-imposed."

- "Baeden: A queer journal of heresy"

So many leftist writings on gender abolition seem lost on the how.

Looking for a blue print to follow.

It is quite simple though,
stop talking about it and just follow what makes sense.

Then go from there.

First gender cannot simply be redefined
to accommodate for everyone.

"When staking our claim on identity labels of non-binary, we find ourselves always again caught back in the realm of gender."

To take on identity in a rejection of the gender binary is still to accept the binary as a point of reference"
